Federal government agencies are settling all its belongings piled upon the porch and a notice that it must vacate by morning to make room for a white family. Bottom center: The type of house being built in Transylvania for white farmers. Top center: A Negro farmer, former Transylvania resident, with all of his belongings, going to some new place. All of his household goods have been thrown into a truck. Right: This farmer had to move his corn. When he reached the new place, he found there was no barn, so he had to keep his corn in his kitchen.
